The State Hotel

The Emerald City may be in a construction craze, but that doesn't mean its historic gems are all lost. After sitting vacant since the 70s, the 1904 landmark Eitel Building was reborn as the State Hotel in March. Seattle architecture firm Weinstein A+U and the Portland-based Vida Design company joined forces for the $12.2 million renovation, which polished the stately stone façade (a stark contrast to the surrounding skyscrapers), developed street-level storefronts and restaurants, and added an eighth floor with guest rooms and a rooftop terrace featuring Pike Place Market views.
